BUGS!, written by Melanie Hampton, is a play for elementary age children about bullying prevention and celebrating differences.

Things are snug as a bug in a rug at school until the new kid shows up with enviable expertise about bugs. All the students think Max is the bee's knees. All of them, except Logan, whose jealousy turns into bullying behavior that's as bad as a case of bed bugs. Will the other students realize they can't just be flies on a wall? Can Max stand up to Logan's bullying behavior? And is there room for new friendship on the playground?

Super School, written by Bethany Wallace, is a play for elementary age children about bullying prevention and friendship making.

Your favorite heroes from Camp Super Friend are back for a new adventure! It's Marvel's first day at Asteroid Academy and Jet introduces him to Danrelle, a girl with invisibility power, and Tilly, a girl with super-strength and a temper to match. When Danrelle uses her power to steal Tilly's rocket ball and bully her into losing her temper, Tilly's reaction puts her in danger of being suspended. Can Tilly learn to manage her emotions in time? Will the students of Asteroid Academy learn the power of the three R's: Recognizing, Reporting and Refusing Bullying Behavior before their actions cause superhero-sized trouble?

Team Player Mode, written by Bethany Wallace, is a play for elementary age children about bullying prevention and accepting differences.

Today's mission: start at a new school and make some friends. After Ben moves in with his dad he finds out life at his new school is way different. Everyone makes fun of his backpack and they all play that new adventure video game. If Ben can just learn how to play and complete a mission he'll be invited to join The 5th Grade Gamers. But between his opponents in the fantastical video game world and the students at school, Ben's going to need the power of the three R's: Recognizing, Reporting and Refusing bullying behavior and the teamwork of his gaming friends to complete his mission.

Allies from Outer Space, written by Bethany Wallace, is a play for elementary age children about bullying prevention and diversity.

Jeepers creepers, the aliens are coming to school, and they never shower! At least that's the gossip when an alien spaceship makes an emergency landing on earth. While waiting for repairs, the alien queen on board sends her daughter to the local school with a mission: to find out if humans are intolerant of differences and if they use their technology to bully others. Will the students at Galaxia Elementary treat Princess Komodo with respect despite her tail and webbed fingers? Or will their bullying behavior force the queen to take drastic measures against bullying and wipe out the earth's technology for good?!

Relationship Status, written by Anne Kennedy Brady, is a play for middle and high school students about cyberbullying and personal responsibility in social situations.

Jason and Trevor have been best friends for years, but Jason's pursuit of Claire throws it all into turmoil. As alliances shift and Trevor struggles to maintain their friendship, Jason and his new girlfriend begin an online campaign of bullying and harassment which leaves Trevor isolated and upset. With newfound confidence, Jason begins a run for class president, providing Trevor an opportunity to publicly humiliate him. Relationship Status examines the social consequences of online behavior, and how to make positive choices to end the downward spiral of cyberbullying and harassment.

The Social NetWorth, written by Melanie Godsey, is a play for middle and high school students about cyberbullying, body image, and personal responsibility in social situations.

It's all fun and games until someone gets hurt. Hayley's Body Positivity Club is off to a start, and she's chronicling the experience on her vlog. Meanwhile, class clown Jason struggles with his own body image after his best friend Cody makes fun of him. To hide his insecurities, Jason joins Cody in remixing Hayley's vlogs into an embarrassing montage body-shaming her. As the video spreads around the school, Hayley's life starts to crumble and the students of Everwood must choose how they treat their peers. The Social NetWorth examines the consequences of online behavior while helping students make positive choices to end cyberbullying and harassment.
